The underlying assumption of the course is that gender equality is not just the concern of women - it is a human right issue, a concern for us all, because no society can fully develop – economically, socially or politically – when roughly half of its population is marginalized. Gender equality is also a necessary condition for a peaceful and sustainable world. As it was indicated by the UN, the challenges of building pathways to sustainability and enhancing gender equality are both urgent and must be addressed together. While gender equality has been listed as a separate goal under 2015 SDG Agenda, this issue is also present within targets connected with other goals (health, education and eradication of poverty). The course focuses on different barriers in achieving gender equality worldwide - discrimination, domestic violence, trafficking in women. Teaching methods include: lecture with power point presentation, discussion and case-studies to be solved by students in small groups.

The Law of EU External Relations has long attracted attention of scholars and the practitioners alike. Yet, only in the past 10 years has the discipline been properly born positioning itself on the borderline between the legal and political studies. The offered course will focus on the position of the EU in the world, actors that drive its initiatives and the variety of instruments (diplomatic, legal, military, economic etc.) it uses. The hours you will spend studying the Law of EU External Relations will add to your understanding of the global affairs and, in particular, this course will raise your awareness as to the both realised and unrealised potential the EU has and impact it has long exerted on its third country collaborators. Finally, against the odds and the unfavourable internal setting, you will gather tools to evaluate if at all and if so - how - can the old continent maintain the position of the leader worldwide.
